Probe after missile blunder in Strait

Written by Taipei Times Saturday, 02 July 2016 08:19 -

Investigators in Kaohsiung yesterday gather evidence on board the Hsiang Li Sheng, a fishing boat that was hit by the unintentional discharge of a missile. Photo: CNA

One fisherman was killed and three injured after a locally developed supersonic anti-ship missile was launched from one of the navy's 500-tonne corvettes docked at Zuoying (11) Military Harbor in Kaohsiung at 8:15am yesterday, the navy said.

The Hsiung Feng III missile did not cross the median line of the Taiwan Strait, it said, adding that the firing was most likely caused by human error.

At a news conference called in the wake of the incident, Navy Command Headquarters chief of staff Vice Admiral Mei Chia-shu (11) said the corvette was taking part in an exercise at the base when the missile was launched by mistake.

The missile fell into waters near Penghu County about 40 nautical miles (74.1km) northwest of the base more than two minutes after its launch during an exercise, Mei said, adding the missile fell into waters on the Taiwan side of the median line.

The Taiwan Strait has an average width of 180km.

A chart provided by the navy showed that the simulated target was in the Taiwan Strait, northwest of the harbor and southeast of the offshore county of Penghu.

Written by Taipei Times Saturday, 02 July 2016 08:19 -

Mei said that after the incident, the navy sent a helicopter to the area to make sure the missile had not caused any harm, adding that other navy vessels were also dispatched to the area to help with the search.

Following an initial report that there was an "explosion" on a fishing boat in the Taiwan Strait at about the same time as the missile incident, it was later confirmed that a Taiwanese fishing boat was hit by the missile, causing the death of its captain and injuring the three others on the boat.

In a statement, the Ministry of National Defense said that Chief of General Staff Yen De-fa (000) was leading a task force to conduct further investigation into the incident.

Minister of National Defense Feng Shih-kuan ([]]) instructed deputy chiefs of general staff to head to an emergency center to deal with follow-up issues immediately after the incident occurred, it added.

"Initial information showed that the operator[s] did not follow standard procedure" for testing military equipment during a drill, Mei said.

Mei declined to answer questions about the standard operating procedure for the simulation of a Hsiung Feng III missile launch, saying he could not disclose classified information.

The locally developed Hsiung Feng III missile reportedly has a range of up to 300km.

Mei said a non-commissioned officer should have been familiar with the procedures involved in the missile exercise, but further investigation was needed to determine why the missile was fired, he added.

Probe after missile blunder in Strait

Written by Taipei Times Saturday, 02 July 2016 08:19 -

When asked whether the missile might have been launched intentionally, Mei said investigators would look at all possibilities.

He said that yesterday's exercise was a regular test of military equipment.

The incident occurred as the Chinese Communist Party held an event in Beijing to mark the 95th anniversary of the party's founding.

Asked whether China took any military action in the wake of the incident, Mei said that the navy did not notice any "abnormal actions" by Chinese military aircraft or vessels.

One report, citing an unnamed navy source, said that radar signals indicated some abnormal activity among Chinese military posts after the missile was launched, but Mei said the report was inaccurate.

Mei said there were no Chinese electronic surveillance ships in the area where the missile landed when asked whether Chinese ships might have been trying to collect military intelligence, such as the missile's electronic signature.

Mei said that the navy has no direct communication mechanism with China.

The navy passed on information to the National Security Council and other government agencies to deal with follow-up measures, he said.

Presidential Office spokesman Alex Huang ([]]]) said that President Tsai Ing-wen ([]]]), who was in Los Angeles on the return leg of a diplomatic trip to Latin America, received a briefing on the incident and that she has asked government agencies to investigate.

Probe after missile blunder in Strait

Written by Taipei Times Saturday, 02 July 2016 08:19 -

The navy yesterday held a third news conference at 7:30pm, with navy Commander Huang Shu-kuang ([]]]) saying a sergeant did not follow proper procedures in the drill and performed the testing by himself without any supervisors present.

Seven service members, including the sergeant and Huang Shu-kuang, are to be disciplined, said Huang Shu-Kuang, who called the launch a very serious mistake.

Meanwhile, four people involved in the accident, including the sergeant who allegedly launched the missile and the captain of the military vessel, have been taken to the Kaohsiung District Prosecutors' Office for questioning.

Source: Taipei Times - 2016/07/02