Seven people were killed and 260 injured after a magnitude 6.0 earthquake struck off the coast of Hualien County on Tuesday night, the Central Emergency Operation Center said yesterday.

The center's data showed that four buildings in Hualien City had collapsed or tilted due to the earthquake: the Marshal Hotel (馬場酒家), the Yun Men Tsui Ti (雲門翠堤) commercial and residential building and two apartment buildings on Guosheng 6th Street.

As of 9:30pm yesterday, 67 people were reported missing, 39 of whom were thought to have been in the Yun Men Tsui Ti building.

However, rescue efforts at the Yun Men Tsui Ti building have been precarious, with the building tilting ever more toward the ground amid multiple aftershocks.

A total of 31,558 households were waiting for their water supply to resume, while 186 households were left without electricity, the data showed.

About 560 people have been placed in shelters after being evacuated from their homes on Tuesday night, the data showed.

Huang Jui-tien (黃偉建), a resident of Hualien County's Jian Township (建鄉), told the Taipei Times in a telephone interview that even though there have been aftershocks since a magnitude 5.8 earthquake on Sunday night, he felt that Tuesday's earthquake was much bigger, because things started to shake vertically instead of horizontally.

Huang said he and his family rushed out of their home during the earthquake and returned to find that all of the bonsai plants in the house had fallen to the ground.

"We were afraid to go back to sleep again, because the aftershocks continued almost nonstop," he said.

Most restaurants and shops in the area were closed yesterday, Huang said, adding that convenience stores had run out of hot food.

Asked what his family would do, as the aftershocks are expected to continue over the next few weeks, he said: "Well, life has to go on."

The Ministry of National Defense has deployed 661 military personnel to assist rescue efforts.

Central Weather Bureau (CWB) data showed that Tuesday's earthquake, which measured magnitude 6.0 on the Richter scale, occurred at 11:50pm at a depth of 10km and its epicenter was 18.3km northeast of Hualien County Hall, which is near the coast.

The earthquake's seismic intensity was level 7 in Hualien County's Taroko Gorge (太魯閣峽谷) and Yilan County's Nanao Township (南澳鄉).

Seismic intensity refers to the degree of vibration felt at a location during an earthquake.

On the nation's zero-to-seven seismic intensity scale, level 7 indicates shaking so violent that people cannot move at will.

As of 5pm yesterday, the bureau had recored 159 aftershocks since Tuesday night's big quake.

The bureau had previously said that Sunday's magnitude 5.8 earthquake was the main earthquake and that it expected tectonic movement to gradually cease after multiple aftershocks.

However, it changed its evaluation yesterday, saying that Tuesday's magnitude 6.0 temblor was the main earthquake and Sunday's was one of its 94 foreshocks.

"This seismic sequence has completely changed the way we think about earthquakes in this region," Seismological Center Acting Director Chen Kuo-chang (陳國昌) said.

Chen confirmed that Tuesday's earthquake was the largest in Hualien County since the bureau began conducting more precise observations of earthquakes in 1972.

The bureau said that the earthquake occurred as a result of an interaction between the Philippine Sea Plate and Eurasia Plate, with some seismologists saying that this might trigger movement of the Milun Fault, along which the damaged buildings were constructed.

In related news, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs said that 31 foreign nationals were reportedly affected by Tuesday's earthquake, including 14 South Koreans, nine Japanese, two Czechs, two Singaporeans and one Philippine national.

The nationalities of the remaining three have yet to be confirmed, the ministry said in a statement.

The two Singaporeans and 13 South Koreans were in a temporary shelter at a stadium in Hualien, with only one of them, a South Korean, having sustained minor injuries, it said.

The other 16 foreign nationals received treatment for various injuries at four hospitals in the Hualien area and were later discharged or would soon be discharged, the statement said.

The injuries ranged from wrist and foot injuries to dry powder inhalation, it added.

One South Korean woman living in the Yun Men Tsui Ti building was rescued at about 10am yesterday, the statement said.
